A SON OF OLD ADAMS DIES

WHO MADE GOOD IN A WONDERFUL WAY.

John M. Studebaker, Head of the immense Studebaker Corporation.

John Muehler Studebaker, a son of Old Adams County, is dead at South Bend, Ind. No community has given to this country men of more distinctive American type than this Studebaker family, natives of Adams county, and J. M. Studebaker is the last of five brothers, but one of his immediate generation remains, Miss Maria Studebaker, a sister, living at South Bend. Mr. Studebaker was a man who contributed largely to the making of America in creating one of its largest industries, first the Studebaker wagon plant and later the Studebaker automobile works; but all the time a busy, modest American. He was a man of many millions but simple in garb and habits, one of the people. He was a member of the Church of the Brethren, better known as Dunkards and wore their distinctive garb. He lived through those picturesque frontier times when families emigrated to the West in wagons. He was one of those who went to California when the gold fever was on the rampage, and made his money out of wheelbarrows. He was a unique American type.

John M. Studebaker was the last surviving son of Jacob Studebaker, a native of Adams county, who lived in Tyrone township, Adams county, on the road from Hunterstown to the Heidersburg road. A short distance after crossing Conowingo Creek into Tyrone township will be found the old log blacksmith shop built by Jacob Studebaker, where he built wheelbarrows, wagons and did the smithing work of his community and where he implanted habits of industry and building things right that later years heaped an immense fortune. Jacob Studebaker had thirteen children and on the way westward first stopped at Ashland, O., and the family settled at South Bend, Ind., where they continued the same kind of work followed in their old home in Adams county.

In 1853, J. M. Studebaker, twenty years of age, built his first wagon and gave it as part pay for a trip across the plains to California, where he landed in Hangtown, where he grubbed staked for a while and then went to making wheelbarrows for the miners and in five years cleared $2,000, enough on his return to South Bend to buy a partnership in the developing wagon plant.

Only the reader of the story of the pilgrimage of J. M. Studebaker, "To Old Hangtown or Bust," printed in pamphlet form, can give an adequate point of view of this interesting leading American citizen. Nearly 60 years after his first trip to Hangtown, Wheelbarrow John returns to the town in 1912, and there was a banquet to which every citizen of the place of those first days was invited. The story of his life, told at that banquet by J. M. Studebaker, is a rare piece of sentiment, it is homely, picturesque and interesting from the start when he declares that "the man who goes through his allotted time in this old world without trying to make it better, amounts to little to the faithful when he bids them goodbye, telling them 'they will never meet again this side of God and dawn.'"

On his 80th anniversary at a reception in South Bend, he shook hands with each of the 300 employees of the South Bend Corporation.

The nearest relatives of the deceased in this place are John M. Frank and Charles A. Blocher, a grandmother being a Studebaker, a sister of Jacob Studebaker.

Samuel G. Spangler Breaks His Leg. Samuel G. Spangler, York street member of the firm of Spangler & Oyster, met with an accident on Wednesday which resulted in the bones of his right leg being broken at the knee. Mr. Spangler had been out of town to a sale and returned about dark to the fertilizer plant near town. Thinking that he would see if the fire in the office stove was alight, he walked through the garage to the office which is in the end of that building. In the darkness he walked into a work pit five feet deep, built for the convenience of repairing their automobiles. There was a chair standing in the pit and this Mr. Spangler struck in such a way as to render him unconscious for some time. He was discovered soon after the accident by J. Price Oyster and later removed to his home on York street.

U. S. PRACTICALLY AT WAR

THE STATUS OF THE UNITED STATES ON GERMANY TO-DAY.

Congress to Meet on April 2nd With the Official Declaration Will Come.

United States and Germany are practically at war. The official declaration will come from Congress when it convenes April 2nd. The date sounds like an omen of victory. Every war this country has had, has officially started in April and every war has been a victorious one for the issues involved, freedom and civilization. Now is the time for but one sentiment—loyalty—as the New York Judge said on Monday in giving the maximum penalty for desecrating the flag, the cry must be "Hats off to the flag." The text of the proclamation of the President is as follows:

Whereas, public interests require that the Congress of the United States be convened in extra session at 12 o'clock noon on the second day of April, 1917, to receive a communication concerning grave matters of national policy which should be taken immediately under consideration. Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene in extra session at the Capitol in the city of Washington on the second day of April, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon, of which all persons who shall at that time be entitled to act as members thereof are hereby required to take notice.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States of America the 21st day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen and of the independence of the United States the 41st.

(Seal) WOODROW WILSON.
Robert Lansing, Sec. of State.

New Gettysburg Book.

"Lincoln's Gettysburg Address" is the title of a new book by Orton H. Carmichael, just from the Abington Press. There is a wealth of valuable illustration, much of it giving the near touch, as the home of David Willis, his portrait, Miss Agnes McCerary, Presbyterian Church and Baltimore Street, 1863. The author has gathered into a hundred pages the story of the dedication of the national Cemetery, the trip of Lincoln from the White House to Gettysburg, the night the President spent in town, the day of the dedication, the evolution of the address, a product of training and of genius. The author has carefully gone to first sources for much of his data. The author was a classmate of Rev. Taylor of this place and in his foreword says: "In an especial way we desire to acknowledge our very great indebtedness to the Rev. Franklin Ellisworth Taylor, minister in the First Presbyterian Church of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Mr. Taylor is an ardent lover of Lincoln and a student of local history and tradition, and the assistance which he was able to render in the preparation of this little volume was altogether invaluable."

The work has been well done and every lover of Gettysburg and the great Lincoln will want a copy for his or her library. The book is sold at 85 cents at several places in town. There is one criticism to the work to be made, an omission rather than a commission, the facts as to the applause. The author states that the "Gettysburg audience so quiet when he arose to speak and his address so short that the people had hardly adjusted themselves to listen when he ceased. As he took his seat there was silence for a moment then some scattered applause." The author thus kotows to the fiction of "The Perfect Tribute" rather than to the facts. Necessarily he must have had some of the facts of the applause before him but does not present them.

As careful a record of facts as this town has - or had have been from the Jacobs family and Dr. Henry E. Jacobs of Philadelphia in a recent article said, "The speech I remember well, was punctuated by the applause of those who heard it. I have refreshed my memory by reading the report in the 'Public Ledger' of Nov. 20, which marks applause four times during the address and long applause followed by three cheers for the President and the Governors of the States at the end." Mr. Hartner, editor of the "Sentinel," entertained Secretary Seward and all stories agree that President Lincoln showed the finished speech to Mr. Seward. Editor Harper is the one local paper printing the speech correctly, and he records applause at the different points and long continued applause at the end and was able to do so because of close touch with events.

If our people had been so stupid as to fail to recognize the greatness of the address, which was immediately recognized in the newspaper world, it would have a pitiful exhibition, but when they were both courteous enough to applaud the first sentence of the President and delighted and thrilled to respond again and again it is a perversion to the facts to insist upon parading a stupidity that never existed for the sake of a pretty fiction.

If You Need Rugs Within the Next Year==Buy Them Now!

THIS is sound advice, which may be wisely followed by all home-furnishers. The present shortage of carpet wool, of jute, of linen, and the higher costs of labor, fuel, power and other items, are forcing manufacturers to increase prices of future shipments. If you need Rugs at once, or next summer or autumn—buy them NOW at present prices. For the information of our customers it is almost unnecessary to say that, irrespective of market conditions, we shall still adhere to the same standards. Our prices always shall be based on actual costs to us—and we shall take advantage of every merchandising opportunity which might be converted to your advantage. Despite unprecedented market conditions our selling of Rugs last month exceeded all previous records for January and February sales. The following Rugs here named we have fair stocks of.

Wool Fiber Rugs	Tapestry	Axminster	Body Brussels

6x9 ft.	8-3x10-2
8-3x10-6	9x12
9x12

Oil Cloth, Linola and Linoleums. The above remarks hold good in this line as some of the largest manufacturers have withdrawn their lines and the trend of advance and scarcity is sure to be felt this year. We have a fair assortment here at no exorbitant prices

Window Shades. These are higher than last season, but we feel confident we can give you prices that will save you money from prices later on when our present stock is sold

Berkeley Hydrate is the Best Form of Lime to Use Because

- There is no fire risk.
- It does not deteriorate with age.
- It can be baled when most convenient and stored in any shed until time for use.
- Except for the water necessary to hydrate, it is pure lime.
- It is easy to handle and spread.
- Its fineness makes it economical.
- One ton of lime to the acre if UNIFORMLY DISTRIBUTED would make a layer only 1-300 inch in thickness. Lime MUST be uniformly distributed and therefore VERY FINELY DIVIDED in order to reach the rootlets of the crops and accomplish its work.
- BERKELEY Hydrate will practically all pass through a sieve with 10,000 holes to the square inch. This is the reason why one-half ton to the acre of BERKELEY Hydrate will accomplish the same results as double the quantity of lump lime saked in the field.

New Evidence Constantly Being Published.

Since the long succession of Gettysburg reports were first published in the local press there has been no looking back. Gettysburg evidence continues to pour in, and—better still—those whose reports were first published many years ago, verify all they said in a most hearty and unmistakable way. Read the experience of Mrs. N. L. Wierman, 135 York St. She says:

"I suffered a great deal from backache and nervousness. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the People's Drug Store, and they helped me greatly. My nerves were strengthened and my back was greatly benefited. I gladly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and advise anyone troubled by nervousness or backache to try them."

The above statement was given on January 3, 1910 and on February 14, 1916, Mrs. Wierman said: "It hasn't been necessary for me to use Doan's Kidney Pills for some time. I am pleased to back up my past recommendation for them."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Wierman has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

All-White Continent, Hope Of Suffragists of America

MEN OF Pennsylvania will you remain linked with smug America—the extremes of the uninhabited Northwest Territory and unenlightened Mexico? Or will you be linked with the vast whites and grays of complete or partial progress?

Young advocate of the enfranchisement of women shows Pittsburgh Suffrage Class how movement has advanced.

Suffragists Visualize Entire Franchise Movement to Date

Changes in North American Map Show Marked Advance in Movement, 10 Weeks of 1917 Already Making it Banner Year of "The Cause"

SEVEN VICTORIES RECORDED

Statistics concerning the remarkable progress of the woman suffrage movement in the first 10 weeks of 1917, and also since 1869, when the first state, Wyoming, granted equal franchise, have been compiled in complete detail by the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association.

Suffragists say that their compilations eliminate the last vestige of doubt concerning whether suffrage is "coming or going," it being shown conclusively that 1917 will be recorded in suffrage annals as a banner year, even if nothing more is accomplished than has been.

For Legislators

Although arranged by suffrage statisticians primarily to show the members of the Pennsylvania legislature at a glance the scope of the suffrage movement, and particularly the progress made in 1917, the tables will be used generally in suffrage work throughout the state.

State suffrage leaders assert the belief that Pennsylvania legislators after digesting the statistics will not refuse to take steps to enfranchise the women of their state as the legislators of so many others have done.

The data shows that Pennsylvania is the only Eastern state north of the Mason and Dixon line which has not granted suffrage in any form to its women, except Maine and Rhode Island, and Maine, it is pointed out, has authorized a referendum on constitutional woman suffrage next September.

In its condensation, the suffrage pamphlet shows that Pennsylvania is now aligned with only 13 other states in the Union, which have granted no suffrage at all to their women. The others are: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

Where Women Vote.

In part, the statistics show:

Eleven states having full suffrage—Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

One territory having full suffrage—Alaska.

Four states having presidential suffrage—Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and North Dakota.

Nineteen states having partial suffrage—Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Vermont and Wisconsin.

Victories recorded in the first 10 weeks of 1917 include presidential suffrage granted in Ohio, Indiana and North Dakota; primary suffrage in Arkansas; and constitutional suffrage referendum authorized in New York (November, 1917), Maine (September, 1917) and South Dakota (1918).

States in which measures authorizing constitutional presidential and municipal or primary suffrage have been introduced, include—Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, (Constitutional), Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont and Wisconsin.

In several of these states bills have been passed by one branch, and in some others the measure has been defeated by both branches. In the majority of the latter cases, however, suffrage polled a larger vote than its opponents, but lost because a two-thirds vote was necessary to pass amendments, or polled a larger vote than at previous sessions.

Other impressive data given concerning Canada shows that excepting the uninhabited Northwest territory and the Northeastern fringe comprising Newfoundland, Canadian women have been granted or assured full suffrage in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, comprising three-fourths of the entire population of Canada. In Yukon and Quebec, other provinces, the women have partial suffrage, showing that the women in practically the entire territory of this British dominion have full or partial suffrage, while women in 14 states in the neighboring Republic are denied any voice in their government.

MRS. GIFFORD PINCHOT STATE SUFFRAGE LEADER

One of the most striking personalities in suffrage work in this country, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot of Milford, Pike county, has been elected as a member of the executive board of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association. Among other suffrage activities in which she will participate will be assisting the legislative committee at Harrisburg.

Mrs. Pinchot is as widely known as a suffragist, particularly in Washington, D. C., and New York, among women for her broad interests as her husband, Gifford Pinchot, Progressive and Conservationist, is among men.

During the suffrage parade in Chicago, while the National Republican delegates were in convention, Mrs. Pinchot marched with the Pennsylvania suffrage delegation; and Mr. Pinchot, last November, was one of the chief speakers at the banquet held in connection with the Pennsylvania state suffrage convention in Williamsport.

As member of the state suffrage board, Mrs. Pinchot will become one of the two auditors of that organization to fill a vacancy which has existed for several months.

NEW YORK VICTORY ELATES WOMEN HERE

With suffrage, as previously noted, brought to the Pennsylvania state line on the west, when the Ohio legislature granted presidential suffrage to women, Pennsylvania suffragists, are sounding notes of pleasure over the victory in New York.

This is the granting by the New York legislature of a referendum for election to be taken on constitutional suffrage in 1917. A similar measure was defeated in 1915, but the legislators evidently, according to the suffragists, were of the opinion that sentiment demands another referendum at this time.

BELOW THE RIO GRANDE

The United States Congress is not the only national legislative body numbering among its membership a woman. Recent news dispatches from Mexico City announce that Miss Herlinda Galindo, a suffragist, has been elected to the lower house of the Congress of Mexico, showing, according to Pennsylvania suffragists, that the Rio Grande is only an imaginary line of division so far as progress of women of the two countries is concerned.

"No one can be justly excluded from the franchise except upon grounds of personal unfitness or public danger."—W. E. Gladstone

UNCLE SAM IN HAITI

INTERESTING STORY OF THE U. S. MARINES IN THE ISLAND.

Captain Fagan, Attending the Marine Officers' School Here Tells of the Life and Duties in Haiti.

The following interesting letter has been received by Col. John P. Nicholson from Louis E. Fagan, Jr., who is now stationed with the U. S. Marines at Haiti. Captain Fagan is well known in Gettysburg having made many friends here while attending the Marine Officers School during the summer of 1915.

Lascaobas, Haiti, 22nd February, 1917.

My Dear Colonel:

I am now stationed in the very interior of Haiti, about six hours ride from the Dominican frontier, a part of which line bounds the territory under my command. This is a most interesting district, as it lies immediately south of the Caco country, and controls all the inland trails leading to the Capital, Port au Prince, which is the ultimate goal of nearly all the revolutions, begun in the north. At present the Caco chiefs are well in hand, but they are restless by nature and their funds are rapidly nearing depletion. The German element also exists in the larger towns.

To give you some idea of the town, I tell you that my house, as good as any in the vicinity, rents for $200.00 gold per month. It has four rooms and a corrugated roof, and is really quite pretentious, as most of the dwellings are thatched covered. This sides are plastered, externally faced with plam wood, laid clap board style. The floor is made of inland pebbles. My spring bed was carried on prisoners' heads over the mountains a distance of at least 35 miles from the small railroad terminus, Thomaztan, which connects with Port au Prince by rail. The company is 97 strong, all Haitians, and we have a captain (myself) a first lieutenant, a second lieutenant and a medical officer; the lieutenants formerly non-coms. of Marines; the medico formerly a hospital apprentice, 1st class U. S. Navy. All three are very nice chaps. The company is divided into two sections, each controlling a sub-district with a lieutenant commanding, headquarters at Lascaobas, and Mirabalais respectively. The district headquarters is at Lascaobas, and my duty is one of supervision only, all military details being left in the lieutenant. There are five outposts garrisoned by men and non-coms. from the sub-districts. These lie in small towns that lie about three to five hours riding from the sub-district headquarters. The pay of the men as follows:

1st Sergeant	$25.00 gold
Sergeant	$20.00 gold
Corporal	$15.00 gold
Private	$10.00 gold

In addition there is paid to each man 10 cents per day for rations which in this country is sufficient to supply nourishing food. In the outposts, the men are paid their ration money, but at headquarters we feed them in a mess, at three dollars per month, more or less, depending on the number of days in the month.

The Gendarmier performs military duties, guards prisons, repairs roads, telegraph and telephone lines, checks up on public officials, pays all civil employees, (Judges, Magistrates, etc.) and keeps a general eye open. The men are uniformed like marines, except that their chevrons and hat cord are scarlet and their hat device is the arms of Haiti done in brass. They carry Krag cavalry carbines, and have target practice. All hands sleep in barracks. The company commanders have greater power than is ordinarily allotted to captains of other services. They may enlist men with the advice of the medical officer,—discharge men at will—degrade at will—or promote men one grade per month, all without consultation with higher officials. This tends to enforce discipline amongst these people who are entirely unfamiliar with law and order. The captain may imprison a man for 15 days only, but a district court-martial composed of two company officers may give three months without further approval, or six months with approval of Department Headquarters.

There are three departments, Nord, Port au Prince, and Sud. In each are about six districts. Each district has from two to three sub-districts. Paper work and red tape are reduced to a minimum. Communication by road in the inland is poor, but we are pushing ditched and crowned roads as fast as the revenues will permit. This is done with paid labor, the workmen receiving 20 cents (1 gourde) per day. The trails are repaired by "corves," the inhabitants being called out from 6 a. m. Monday to 6 p. m. Thursday, until the work is finished. In case of refusal or failure to work, appropriate punishment is awarded. This is the Haitian law which is now for the first time in years being enforced.

We are now very busy pushing things rapidly, so as to finish the essentials ere the rainy season commences. Then it will be almost impossible to do any road work, as the streams are very dangerous, and the mud renders travel well nigh impossible. This begins in June and lasts through August. On the trail to Savanette, an outpost, one crosses and recrosses a mountain stream 20 times actual count. Huge boulders wash down for miles when the flood is high.

As for wonderful views and beautiful scenery, I consider that Haiti is almost the equal of any country in the world, if I may judge from photographs that I have seen of famous landscapes, and from countries that I have personally visited.

The great soul that sits on the throne of the universe is not never was and never will be in a hurry.—Timothy T. Leary

U. S. ARMY MUST REORGANIZE*A FIGHTING ARMY LIKE KITCHENER'S IS THE NEED.*A Modern and Democratic Army to Replace an Aristocratic and Antiquated System.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, in a recent letter to the "Public Ledger" of Philadelphia, gave a clear and lucid analysis of the modern and democratic army of the United States needs to replace its antiquated system. He said, among other things:

In the case of immediate war, the country will have to use the means at hand, namely, the regular army and the militia; but these will be merely temporary resources, for the regular army is far too small, and the militia is not only feeble in numbers, but wrongly composed. Moreover, the regular army closely resembles the old British army, all the privates being from the humbler classes and all the officers carefully trained to conduct themselves as if they belonged to a superior class. It is also a professional army, so far as the officers and many of the noncommissioned officers are concerned—that is, preparation for war and war itself is to be their life work. The State militia is nonexistent in some States; in others it is so imperfectly equipped that it cannot be said to be ready for any military service whatever, and in others so illtrained and so poorly officered that fresh material would often be preferable in case of war. Moreover, the militia is less and less willing to perform serious duty, like the suppression of riots, the prevention of dangerous public disorders and the guarding of public property in times of alarm. The rank and file of the militia contain men of various ages—some very inappropriately aged—and not a few men with whose daily occupations it is not for the interest of the community as a whole to interfere for any length of time.

In short it is a new kind of army that the United States needs, a Swiss army or a Kitchener's army, an army which enrolls year after year all the able-bodied young men of nineteen years of age, and gives them during short periods of service in camps or barracks all the training in the hard work of a soldier which can be given without interfering seriously with the civil occupations of the young men.

The Swiss army is a potential army, an army on call, and not a regular or standing army. The training of its soldiers is accomplished in several short periods of service with the colors distributed through years between the ages of nineteen and thirty-one, namely, from sixty to ninety days (according to the corps to which the recruit is assigned) in the first years of service and from eleven to fourteen days in each of seven (cavalry eight) out of the eleven years following. Between thirty-two and forty the Swiss soldier attends on "repetition course" of eleven days. There are special "schools" of twenty to thirty-five days for the training of noncommissioned officers. Commissioned officers are trained for the different corps in "schools" which require attendance (according to corps) of from forty-five to 105 (in two parts) days. Officers and noncommissioned officers are selected and promoted by their teachers and commanders for merit only, which must be proved in service and by appropriate tests and examinations. (See Lieutenant-Colonel George Bell, Jr.'s Report of 1911 to the United States Army War College.) That is the sort of citizens' army which the United States should henceforth maintain.

There are two reasons for the immediate organizations of a modern democratic army by the United States. The first reason is that the country may be seen to possess the means of defense against attack from without, no matter by how formidable an aggressor. The second is that the country may be seen to be in a fair way to possess a vast and well-trained army capable of taking a worthy part in the alliance which after this war is to prevent war and establish a durable peace. The United States cannot take a worthy part in that alliance unless it visibly possesses a citizens' army—not a standing army—counted by millions, perfectly equipped, always on call, and capable of rendering with skill and devotion any of the military services which any or all of the Entente Allies have been called on to perform.

The civilized world wants an assured peace immediately. People who look facts in the face see but one way to get it—through the offensive and defensive alliance, for that express purpose, that would include the present Entente Allies and some of the free nations which have been thus far neutral, among which the United States ought to be the strongest and would be an indispensable member.

In the communication from the Department of State to the Ambassadors at the capitals of the belligerent Powers, dated December 18, 1916, the following passage occurred:

In the measures to be taken to secure the future peace of the world the people and Government of the United States are as vitally and as directly interested as the governments now at war. Their interest, moreover, in the means to be adopted to relieve the smaller and weaker people of the world of the peril of wrong and violence is as quick and ardent as that of any other people or government. They stand ready, and even eager, to co-operate in the accomplishment of these ends, when the war is over, with every influence and resources at their command.

This assertion made by the President of the United States on a solemn occasion was accurate, sound and far-reaching. "With every resource at their command." That phrase covers, of course, the country's wealth and agricultural and industrial forces and its men, and specifically the army and navy. But if the United States is to take its fair share in the great work of securing the future peace of the world, including an effective protection of the smaller and weaker peoples, it ought to keep visibly ready both naval and military forces of the modern sort. It does not now possess such forces. Hence, Congress and the Administration should make all possible haste to provide them. Until Congress enacts the legislation needed to institute universal military training, all measures for preparedness will be only temporary or provisional. The real provision of adequate forces will not have been started.

In this emergency the sensible and prudent thing to do is to copy the Swiss legislation under which that republic's effective and always ready army has been created. It is much to be deplored that the General Staff of the United States army has put before the country a proposal that all able-bodied young men in an army of to serve eleven months in an army of which the present regular army is to be the type. That such a proposal should have proceeded from the General Staff is a demonstration that the Government and the people of the United States cannot intrust to the chiefs of the existing regular army the preparation of the general scheme for organizing and bringing into being the new kind of army which the country needs, because those chiefs obviously have in mind an old-fashioned kind of army which is not for the interest of the people of the United States to create for permanent uses. Fortunately, it is unimaginable that either Congress or the Administration should adopt such an impracticable suggestion.

The war has demonstrated two reassuring facts: First, that no taint of militarism in the popular mind need result from the creation of a citizens' army large in proportion to the population if it be a democratic army like that of Switzerland or France, or like the present British army, popularly known as Kitchener's army, and bearing little resemblance to the former regular army of Great Britain; and secondly, that a democratic army cannot be surpassed, in actual marching, digging and fighting on land and in air if it be properly supported by adequate national industries and a resolved national spirit. The now demonstrated superiority of the French and British armies over the German armies in trench fighting, whether with artillery, machine guns, rifles and airplanes, or with bayonets, short swords and hand grenades, affords solid satisfaction to all believers in democracy and in progressive civilization through increasing freedom.

Assuming then that America wants only a democratic army, and that democratic armies are effective, why should the United States have a large army at all? When a quiet, natural man suddenly sees an intruder threatening his wife and children and threatening their lives, he instantly tries to overwhelm the offender with whatever means at hand. He does not stop to measure the amount of force he ought to use on the intruder or the risk he himself runs, and he postpones till some later moment the inquiry whether the offender be a criminal or a lunatic. Thereafter he takes a stronger interest than he ever did before in the maintenance in his neighborhood of a police force competent to prevent such outrages.

That is precisely the situation of modern civilization at this moment. Civilization sees great military monarchies attacking its consort Liberty, and threatening the lives of its most precious offspring—constitutional government, public law and national and international, sanctity of contract, free commerce and freedom of thought and speech. The first thought of civilization has been to overwhelm its assailants; and in that terrible undertaking the United States has borne no active part. At last, civilization begins to see success not far off, and is taking thought for an international police force competent to prevent another such outrage. Then comes the United States, and says by its President that it will do its part in maintaining an adequate international police for that object; and the whole people say, Amen!

In order to do its part in that solemn work the first measure, after enlarging and perfecting the navy of the United States, is to enact universal military service, and then to make the necessary registration of young men entering their twentieth year and provide the equipment for the first levy and arrange for its instruction during the first period—sixty to ninety days, according to corps.

Therefore, it is the urgent duty of the new Congress and the Administration to enact universal military service for rich and poor, for educated and uneducated alike, and to organize a democratic army comprehending all sections, races and religions, and representing the entire nation through its young men, who accept a common obligation and respond faithfully to a common summons.

Two Trespassers

One of Them Seemed Inclined to Commit Burglary

By ETHEL HOLMES

To women flowers are irresistible. Men sometimes love flowers, but it is questionable if any man ever felt toward them as a woman may feel. To a man flowers may be beautiful; to a woman they may be companions. She may tell them what lies nearest to her heart, and she will derive sympathy from them.

Effie Tisdale was one of those girls who flowers thus appeal. In the spring she would watch for the first wild flowers and take long walks in the country to gather them. She would have cultivated flowers had there been any ground for the purpose about her home. Living in a city, she was obliged to go elsewhere for her favorites.

One day toward the close of the summer, when the flowers that are cultivated in the open were fast shedding their petals, Effie concluded to take one of her long walks. If she could find flowers she might at least enjoy a beautiful view she had often looked upon several miles from the town. It was a good day for walking, the air coming out of the northwest and laden with the first crispness of autumn. She stepped out briskly, drinking in the beauties of natural scenery as only one can who has been endowed with the gift of such appreciation. When she came to the view she sought she sat on a stone and rested her eyes upon it, her whole being refreshed with it as if she had drunk some delicious beverage. She was looking from an eminence toward a gap between two ranges of hills or, more properly, mountains. In places the foliage had begun to lose its deep summer green. Here and there a light smoke from some house curled up against the landscape. Over all the afternoon sun spread a golden glow.

When Effie had rested her eyes for some time she arose for her return, which she chose to make by another route. At the foot of the declivity beneath her the road turned and led into another which would take her back home. She descended from her perch, her eyes lingering upon the view before her as she walked, passed around the bend and ascended another rise in the ground. On this elevation was a country place. The awnings to protect the windows and the porch from the sun were still in their places; wicker chairs and hammocks had not been taken in. The gate was open. A gravel walk led up to the house and a conservatory beside it. Most of the plants had been removed from their beds to their glass winter home. The open gate and the gravel walk were inviting. Effie was drawn by the sight of verdure under the transparent house to go in and inhale that delicious odor so enjoyable to lovers of plants. But dare she? That was a question she alone could decide.

She looked longingly for some time into the inclosure, expecting to see some one moving about. Despite the appearance of occupancy, no one appeared. The place had surely not been closed for the coming winter or the porch furniture would have been removed. If sure the occupants had gone away, Effie thought she would venture in; if not, she would refrain.

While she was peering wistfully she heard a step, and a young man in hunting costume and with a gun on his shoulder approached. Effie wondered if he would know whether the coast was clear.

"Can you tell me," she asked, "whether the family living in that house are there now?"

"Why do you wish to know?" asked the young man.

"Because—because—well, I would like to go in and look about—the conservatory."

"You don't mean that you are afraid to go in?" the huntsman interrupted.

"It isn't that. If the family were not there it wouldn't be so much like trespassing."

"But it would be trespassing all the same, wouldn't it?"

"I don't know. There would be no one there to be offended."

"Well, such being the case, suppose we go in and have a look."

"I will if there's no one except the caretaker."

"There isn't. The occupants went to the city yesterday, leaving the butler to look after the place. Come, let's go in and see ourselves at home."

Effie stepped back. "I only wish to see the plants in the conservatory," she said. "I don't know if I would be allowed there."

"It'll be allowed there," was the reply. "And if you are permitted to put me out back here to fight for the girl."

The third girl looked with admiration and envy on this fearless man who dare invade another's premises and followed him meekly into the grounds. She felt somewhat anxious, since he had a gun, lest he might shoot some one. But when he reached the house he deposited the weapon, together with his other hunting paraphernalia, on the porch, then continued his way toward the conservatory. The door stood open and, deferentially standing aside for Effie to pass in, he followed her. She stood inside, looking around her admiringly.

"How different the air in here from outside!" she said.

"Kind of moldy; something like the inside of a tomb."

"Not at all like a tomb. It's a home for living plants. The odor is their breath."

She stepped up to some flowers that were fading and inhaled their perfume.

"I love flowers. Don't you?" she asked.

"I did once, but after attending a succession of funerals I have come to dislike them."

"What a pity! They seem like beloved friends to me. They talk to me."

"I've heard girls say that before. I wonder what it means. What do they say to you?"

"All sorts of nice things."

He led the way to a bank of chrysanthemums and said, addressing them:

"Hello, Santhy! How are you feeling today?"

After pretending to listen to the reply he asked Effie if she knew what it was.

"What was it?" she asked.

"Santhy says that I have a very nice girl with me, but I'm doing very wrong in leading her to trespass on other persons' property."

This recalled Effie to the situation, and she looked anxiously toward the door.

"Don't be frightened," said the young man, then addressing the flower:

"Santhy, just you tell whoever is in charge of this place that I can throw stones even if I do live in a glass house."

He said this with a pretense of valor that made Effie wonder all the more, though she was a bit frightened at the prospect of a battle with the butler.

"Santhy's talking to me again," said the poacher. "He says: 'Take all the flowers you want and give them to the little girl with you. She's just the dearest, prettiest creature that has ever been in this conservatory. Don't you see all the flowers bowing their heads before her? Look at that aster over there. He's dying of envy of you.'"

This sounded very pleasant to Effie and she blushed a little.

"Which one of you flowers," continued the young man, "could put on a tin like that? The best any of you could do would be like the paint on a red wagon in comparison. All you're fit for is to decorate her."

With this he began to gather such flowers as were in bloom and turn them over to Effie.

"Oh, don't!" she cried. "You mustn't! That's robbery!"

"I love robbery. I think I would like to have been a burglar. By the bye, suppose we break into the house."

He said this so seriously that Effie was not sure but that he meant it. At any rate, she caught her breath.

When he had loaded her with flowers he said:

"Come, let's see what we can find elsewhere. If I meet any one I'll make him set up something to eat."

Urging Effie to go with him, he left the conservatory and, ascending the porch, rang the bell. The summons was answered by a middle-aged serving woman.

"Is there anything left in the larder?" asked the burglar.

"There's some crackers and cheese, sir, and a part of a cake."

"Bring them out and make a pitcher of fruit punch."

Effie's mind was so imbued with the belief that her companion was a trespasser that it did not occur to her that he had any right whatever to give such an order. Her imagination helped her to hear this order given in a commanding tone. Instead of waiting for the refreshment she took to flight. Laughing, the young man ran after her.

"Hold on," he said, "and I'll explain. I live here. My mother and sisters have gone to town. I remained for some shooting. Forgive me for imposing upon you. You looked so wistfully innocent when I saw you peering in at the gate that I couldn't help it. Won't you take a bite with me on the porch? The butler's wife will wait on us."

Effie had no mind to accept such an invitation, though she consented to keep the flowers. Her entertainer offered to take her home in his car, but she declined this offer too. Fiddling him good day, she set off to walk home. Presently she heard the sound of an auto behind her, and along came the trespasser. He drove the car beside her and finally convinced her that she might as well ride with a strange man as walk while he rode beside her.

When a man determines to get a woman for himself, his superior dominant power is a great advantage to him. This man had impressed Effie with the fact that he possessed a daring, which was foreign to herself, and, though he had admitted that he had been chasing her, the impression did not fade. He had followed her in his auto and rendered it absurd for her to be walking while she might be riding. Besides, she would run a better risk with an amiable young man than walk alone.

Thus far it was all a stance on her part. Now they came to a part of the road where it forked. One fork led to her home directly, the other by a roundabout way. The driver turned into the latter road. Effie made no move to induce him to take the other. Perhaps she delayed till too late. An auto is a hard vehicle to turn. It requires much backing. When they reached her home they had ridden many miles.

During the following winter a sister of Effie's entertainer called on her, and she was the recipient of flowers from the conservatory on which she had trespassed.
